Reflections

Jeff Hollensworth

I am a Bahamian. I was born in a country whose population is predominantly black. My country's main source of income is tourism which meant that my parents were forced to focus their attention to ways of luring "white, wealthy travelers and vacationers" to our shores, and keeping them there as long as possible to spend their money. However, as the sun continuously travels its east-west path, things began to happen. A new government emerged amidst the white mess that had lingered for too long. A Black government. It taught something to my parents, which they were compelled to teach me; Blackness and what it means to be Black!

I am a Johnny. As a member of this so called "community" I am confronted with conflicts — all sorts of problems stemming from both the Black as well as the white community. These conflicts are all too well known to mention. Nevertheless, I had to find a solution if I was to survive. Indeed, it took me a long time to find out that the solution was simply for me to 'be myself' and only myself.

I understood that I was really not foreign to America. Black people just could not be foreign to America. Despite where you may have been born, she knows the word 'Nigger' too well! After sometime, I realized that there was only one way the Black students on this campus were to succed and survive. We had to cast aside our petty grievances and unite on some common grounds, to withstand this racist society and its oppression. Our common heritage was to be recognized. In the name of Blackness this had to be done.

I am a human being. I am a social animal. I like friends and want them. And, to survive in this world we need to have them. I therefore deem it mandatory that an effort be made to know and understand people — all types of people and to make them your friends, even if it means through compromise. I realize, also, that the world is not all white, neither is it all black, nor can anyone justly contend that it is in the middle. To make it in this world, I discovered that a man just had to acknowledge this fact and abide by it or else be a failure in life. This was how I see the situation, and this is how I live the situation. The most interesting discovery I made was that one does not only attain a greater understanding of what is Blackness. I am proud of my Blackness. Yes, I am very proud of what the Supreme Power has made me and I long for the day when this world can understand and accept the fact that whether it's black, white, yellow, red; we are all God's creatures. Could America unite under that banner? I pause for a reply.

BLACK MAGIC

Charles Bush

St. John's University, along with the College of St. Benedict, two small liberal arts colleges, located behind the clouds of society, from the pollution of the cities, in rural America, offer students the opportunity to pursue an education, rich in tradition.

A liberal arts education provides the experiences designed to cultivate the intellect, will and emotions; producing the educated person possessed with knowledge, a trained mind. All based on a Christian philosophy, being that both of the two schools are Catholic.

Like all schools, regardless of where they are in America, students receive along with their "legitimate education" a dose of racism. Both St. John's and St. Ben's, despite their legitimacy of being liberal arts institution are racist, to some degree.

The university seeks to educate all of its students. This implies a high level of intellectual and cultural development. Hence, the university undertakes to provide instruction in all areas of knowledge to develop in its students the qualities that will allow them to perform in a modern society. However in the cultural advancement of all of its students requires a diversified body of students. Black, Chinese, Mexican, and other people of color, have added to the advancement of the university and its culture.

However, even with the presence of people of color there are still the myths: Chinese have slant eyes, blacks dance constantly wherever they are, Puerto Ricans are loud. There are also questions such as why do Blacks eat together, and socialize most of the time never in the presence of whites. Well — Germans socialize together and Jews worship together. Our distinctive life style and enviromental conditions which are distinctively different from thoses of other groups, owing to a unique heritage of slavery, oppression, exploitation; stemming from racism. White Americans cannot understand nor should they try to analyze life in America for Blacks because they can not from ther perspective.

Why are we at such institutions? These schools have the best equipment, facilities and financial funds available, in the educational arena. As long as whites surround Blacks in this country, similar conditions and situations will occur.

It should be the duty of liberal arts institutions who profess to educate its students, to do several things first before even attempting to solve problems and trying to create an intellectual atmosphere of learning. First and foremost the institution should design curricula which promotes genuine truthful learning among its students and faculty. Secondly students must learn how to think and critize objectively their learning and knowledge. Then and only then can they together obtain an atmosphere of learning.

Naked as sin, an army towel covering my belly,
some of us blush, somehow knees turning to jelly
Next, Next.

I was just nineteen,
there were a 120 like me.
I followed a naked body,
a naked body followed me
Next, Next.

I was still just a kid
when my innocence was lost in a mobile army whore house gift of the army, free of cost
Next, Next.

Me, I really would have liked
a little bit of tenderness,
maybe a word, a smile,
an hour of happiness, but
Next, Next.

Now I always will recall the brothel truck, the flying flags,
the queer lieutenant who slapped
our asses as if we were fags
Next, Next.

I recall how much I cursed myself
for flunking out of school.
Why couldn't I be content there?
Ah, but I had to be a fool
Next, Next.

I will always recall
this voice that I keep hearing now,
how it stank of cheap liquor.
It is fixed upon my brain.
Next, Next.

That voice that stinks of whiskey
of corpses and of mud:
it is the voice of nations
it is the thick voice of blood
Next, Next.

And since then, each woman who surrenders in my arms seems to laugh in my face,
to whisper through my head
Next, Next.

All the naked and the dead
should hold each other's hands
as they watch me scream at night in a dream no one understands
Next, Next.

And when I am not screaming
in a voice grown dry and hollow
A stand on endless naked lines of the following and the followed
Next, Next.

One day I'll cut my legs off or I'll burn myself alive.
Anything, I'll do anything to get out of line, to survive,
Not ever to be the next.
Not ever to be the next.

REFLECTIONS

William VanCleve
Registrar

At a time when many readers of this annual were beginning their high school careers, St. John's 1966 seniors issued an informal paper called "Reflections." 1966, believe it or not, was only a scant seven years ago, yet time enough for some members of that class to have become securely established in their professions and for others, perhaps, to have begun a second career. It is safe to say that no member of the newest senior class knew St. John's as it was then and likely as not your current professors did not either: less than half the present faculty were teaching here in the mid-sixties. LBJ was President, "Environment" a word many could not even spell, and Alcuin Library the newest piece of real estate hereabouts; prefects governed our dormitories, the Refectory was where we ate, Saturday mornings were spent in class, and annual tuitition was a mere $850!

Yet "Reflections" contained more than a hint of nostalgia, a subtle yearning for a disappearing past. Those seniors also wished somehow to slow the rush of time, to recapture and relive a college scene less tumultuous, more serene than the one they were departing. With Vietnam ahead, graduation meant loss of sanctuary: would their years in Collegeville fit them well enough for what lay ahead?

Will yours?

I would think that this is the central question: is what has happened these three or four years going to make much difference in the ways your life is spent? Is the degree you have just received a symbol of something more than membership in the work force this technico-industrial society requires? If you have not yet begun to ask questions such as these, your college education was simply expensive training; and if you have begun asking, you are probably as concerned as were those Johnnies of yesteryear about what you might have missed along the way.

Of course, every college graduates some satisfied customers. This one is no exception. Probably a good college has more than an average number of alumni who believe they understand why their undergraduate years made a difference. This happens when their professors do something more than merely offer courses. Many agree that the distinguishing characteristic of St. John's University is its monastic setting and tradition. Understanding what this means can give you and those of us who remain here something to live with. Here it is important to note what I am not getting at. For laymen, a term unique almost to Collegeville, the meaning of the monks we work with has less to do nowdays with conventional church and the externals of religious practice; more, rather, with how a voluntary association conveys to those outside the Order its reasons for existing. If that past which members of this Benedictine community have studied can be grasped and understood by those of the twentieth century secular world, St. John's is a place where in four years of so one should begin sensing that past's relationship to his own future.

It is human for us to conceive life's meanings in distinct, personal terms. There is just no prescription available here which is filled and faithfully administered will provide for every one of us successful responses to the challenges of daily living. Perhaps "process" is the term that explains best what can happen to some of us during our stay here: the process of our undergraduate education is one as subtle as life itself. We do not find in the curriculum a design for understanding anything; in fact, many would say that our catalog and the one from Sears are more alike than not! Yet somehow we have contrived to replicate here in microcosm the principle features found in the larger society: conflict and amity, competition and cooperation, anger and peace all characterize what we experience on the shores of Lake Sagatagan.

I am rather satisfied that enough of those who spend some of their lives here experience and internalize these features to vote in favor of keeping open. I do not believe that the dynamics found here can be planned for much less evaluated, though I have spent some amount of time thinking they could by. St. John's University is lucky it does not know where it is headed. It is a very human place and if humans knew, not hoped. but KNEW, where they were to be tomorrow, the gloomiest prophecies of computer engineers would be realized.

So my "reflection" for you is this: go away, leave us; do what you have to do and come back once in a while. Share your news with us. Be critical. After all, that is what we have tried to help you to be, but also remember how often these past few years you wished that the older folk would understand more than they ever seemed to. You are leaving one company and joining others; our purpose is to make you willing and able to do just that. We will continue to uphold our traditions and we hope you will too. And if years from now you are not wondering "What's happening at SJU " you will know that something is wrong!

In Recognition

The 1973 SAGATAGAN would like to recognize two dedicated faculty members who will not be on the staff next year — Sr. Rogatia Sohler, OSB of the Chemistry department and Fr. Aidan McCall, OSB, Vice-President for Student Affairs.

Sr. Rogatia will be retiring in the Fall after 40 years of teaching at the College of St. Benedict. Since 1933, she has faithfully conveyed the "ins and outs" of the world of test tubes and amino acids to countless numbers of students. She has particularly been known for her patience — a quality which will surely be missed. We thank her for her service and wish her good luck in the future.

Fr. Aidan's absence will only be temporary since he is going on sabbatical leave. However, we believe some salute is in order in recognition for his productive years in one of the most difficult areas of school administration — student affairs. Since 1968, Fr. Aidan has been the mediator between the administration and the students in many delicate situations which involve the peace and harmony of campus life. His commitment to act in the interest of the students warrants our commendation. We wish him a successful leave of absence.

The Sagatagan staff wishes to express gratitude to Mr. Lee Hanley, the public information offices on both campuses, Mr. Mike Hackleman of Delmar Printing Company, and all the other persons who gave of their time to create this year's annual. Thank you very much.

The 1973 Sagatagan was printed by Delmar Printing Company of Charlotte, North Carolina. The endsheet was photographed by Todd Schweiger. The cover was designed by the yearbook staff.
